

Did you ever find yourself alone with no one to help you to find important facts for your homework assignments? The answers you need may not always be in your school text book or notes. Sometimes your parents may not have the answer you need. It is always good to look for additional information to help you with your assignments, projects and research. The Internet is one place you can go!

My friends tell me they use the following sites to help them with their homework.

National Geographic World Online

www.nationalgeographic.com/media/world/

Here you can virtually travel the world to find facts from researchers and experts who will help you find the answers you need. It has fun facts, you can learn about amazing animals, play fun learning games, enter contests and listen to neat sound effects too!
